Of course Teddy Turtle was late.

"No Siree, I get them for myself."

She hopped into the Luckymobile.

"Who can it be?" whispered Miss Mousie.

LITTLE JACK RABBIT'S ADVENTURES

Uncle Lucky sat upon his cellar door.

"I smell a rabbit— grew!"

He set to work to make a little house.

"Oh, please let go of my tail, Mr. Bear!"

"Wouldn't they be dandy for my dam?" he remarked.

"You've got all you need," answered Little Jack Rabbit. "I'm glad they didn't break up the Old Rail Fence and make railroad ties out of it."

Finally the rails were fastened on the logs and the railroad was finished; the first train was to run through and everybody was waiting to see it.

Mr. and Mrs. John Rabbit put on their Sunday clothes and took Little Jack Rabbit and Brother Bobby Tail to the end of the Old Rail Fence.

Pretty soon a black speck appeared at the end of the long line. It grew bigger and bigger. A cloud of smoke arose and drifted over to the Shady Forest. There was a rattle and a roar and a din. Little

The Conductor asked: "Where's your ticket?"

"What are you saying to my little bunny boy?"

He set it an hour fast.

LITTLE JACK RABBIT'S ADVENTURES

You should have seen that Policeman Dog run.

"Hello, Elly! I suppose You're after money?"

Oh dear, oh dear! said the poor little bunny.

It was Monday
