

Contributors

Andrew Abbott is Gustavus F. and Ann M. Swift Distinguished Service Professor at the University of Chicago. Much of his current research concerns libraries. He has a library research text in press.

Daniel Alves is assistant professor at the History Department, in Faculdade de Ciências Sociais e Humanas, Universidade NOVA de Lisboa, and researcher in the Instituto de História Contemporânea. He has a special interest in the study of the lower middle classes between 1870 and 1914, in urban history, and in historical GIS.

Julia R. Azari is assistant professor of political science at Marquette University. Her research interests include presidential rhetoric, institutional change in American politics, and the relationship between presidents and political parties. Her work has appeared in Perspectives on Politics and Presidential Studies Quarterly. She is author of Delivering the People's Message: The Changing Politics of the Presidential Mandate (forthcoming) and coeditor of The Presidential Leadership Dilemma: Between the Constitution and a Political Party (2013).

Richard Harris teaches urban historical geography at McMaster University. A fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and a recipient of Fulbright and Guggenheim fellowships, he has published on the building industry, housing, housing policy, and suburban development in North America and the British colonies. His most recent book is Building a Market: The Rise of the Home Improvement Industry, 1914–1960 (2012).

Joseph MacKay is a PhD candidate in international relations at the University of Toronto. His research interests include insurgency and counterinsurgency, non-Western historical international political systems, and the history of nonstate international violence.

Ana Isabel Queiroz is researcher in the Institute for the Study of Traditional Literature, in the Faculdade de Ciências Sociais e Humanas, Universidade NOVA de Lisboa. Her main research interests are ecocriticism, digital humanities, and environmental history.

DOI 10.1215/01455532-2378355