PROFILE

DAVID E. POWNALL has been appointed director of Library Services and promoted to the courtesy rank of professor at Hofstra University, Hempstead, New York, effective September 1973. Mr. Pownall served during 1972-1973 as acting director of Library Services. Previous to that he was associate director of Library Services, beginning in 1969. Before coming to Hofstra he was head humanities librarian at Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, British Columbia from 1967-1969. He also served as head of Reader Services at the University of Northern Iowa library from 1964-1967. From 1958 to 1964 he was employed in a variety of capacities at Oregon State University library, Corvallis, Oregon.

Mr. Pownall is well known as a bibliographer. This year the first three volumes of his seven volume bibliography, Articles on Twentieth Century Literature, have been published. His particular areas of expertise are in library organization and management, personnel management, and collection building. He is active in the American Library Association, presently serving on the LAD Committee on Insurance for Libraries and the ACRL Urban Universities Library Committee.

tool. All libraries should have it.”
—RQ

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF ASSOCIATIONS

The Encyclopedia of Associations has traditionally been consulted first by librarians and researchers looking for sources of current, authoritative information, which associations are uniquely equipped to provide on thousands of subjects. The new, Eighth Edition includes some 25,000 changes and 1,224 new listings. Nearly 12,000 of the 17,886 entries are full descriptions of active associations; others are listings for inactive or defunct groups, pseudo-organizations, etc.

In the Spring, 1973 issue of RQ, the previous edition of the Encyclopedia of Associations was described and appraised:*

“During the sixteen years since its introduction in 1956, the Encyclopedia of Associations has earned its reputation as a cornerstone of any sound general reference collection . . .

“Volume 1, the basic volume and the one which all libraries should have if the cost of all three is overwhelming, is a classified listing of, primarily, nonprofit membership organizations of the United States. But included as well are selected nonmembership groups, commercial groups, foreign organizations of interest in this country, international associations with large U.S. memberships, local American organizations of national interest and importance, and numerous ad hoc citizen groups and projects. The information about each association is expressed, usually, in seventeen categories. Included are name, address, number of members, purposes, publications, chief executive, and phone number if supplied by the association. In each of the classified sections, such as Educational and Cultural Organizations, the associations appear in alphabetical order by the principal keyword (underlined) in the title. Section 19—Inactive, Defunct or Foreign Names—is the exception to this convenience. However, quick access is provided to any organization through the general alphabetical/keyword index.

“Volume 2 provides two additional points of access to the associations comprising Volume 1. The Geographic section lists by state and city the names, addresses, phone numbers (if supplied), and executives of the organizations. The Executive section lists by surname the executives cited in Volume 1, together with appropriate association, title, and address . . .

“Volume 3 . . . is especially important in an age of proliferating ideas, problems, and grievances, around which people cluster in organizations to decide upon courses of action and methods of redress. ‘New Associations and Projects,’ or NAP, thus supplements information in Volume 1 by listing in the same format and with the same detail all new associations called to the attention of the publisher between editions of the basic volume . . .

“In a word, the Encyclopedia of Associations is a basic reference tool. All libraries should have it. It can be very useful, too, in the area of technical services, giving acquisitions departments current information on publications and mailing addresses of associations. Cataloging departments may find both the existence and the form of a particular association helpful in determining the form of entry of corporate bodies . . .”
