NO. 8 • SEPTEMBER 1978

New Horizons for Academic Libraries ACRL 1978 National Conference

The Association of College and Research Libraries observes its fortieth anniversary with its first national conference in Boston November 8–11 at the Sheraton-Boston Hotel.

With its theme, "New Horizons for Academic Libraries," the conference focuses on the future prospects for academic and research librarianship in North America. Eight leaders in higher education and librarianship will give a broad overview of the problems and opportunities awaiting college, university, and research libraries.

At the opening session on Wednesday afternoon, November 8, Mary F. Berry, assistant secretary for education, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, will look at the future of higher education in the United States. At the second session that afternoon, Warren J. Haas, president of the Council on Library Resources, will speak on the management of academic libraries.

On Thursday morning, November 9, there will be a report from the National Enquiry into Scholarly Communication on the work of that project and present and future problems in scholarly communication. Morning session will conclude with an address by Joe B. Wyatt, vice-president for administration, Harvard University, on the role of technology in our libraries. At an afternoon session on Thursday, Barbara Evans Markuson, executive director of the Indiana Cooperative Library Services Authority, will speak on cooperation and networking among academic and research libraries.

On Friday morning, November 10, Richard W. Boss, Information Systems Consultants, Inc., in Boston, will speak on programs and services in academic libraries, and he will be followed by Jay K. Lucker, library director at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who will speak on library resources and bibliographic control. In the concluding theme address on Friday afternoon, Millicent D. Abell, university librarian, University of California, San Diego, will speak of the changing role of the academic librarian.

During the first three days of the conference, there will also be seven periods during which a total of sixty-six contributed papers will be presented in a series of concurrent sessions. A list of the authors and titles of these papers—and showing the broad range of subjects covered—appears below.

In addition to the more than 115 commercial and professional exhibits in adjacent halls at the hotel, there will be a number of special functions—a reception at the Boston Public Library on Wednesday evening and at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts on Friday evening. A bonus of the conference is the exhibit at the museum, "Treasures of Early Irish Art, 1500 B.C.-1500 A.D.," which includes the Book of Kells.

Conference participants will be able to participate in "A Boston Dinner" on Thursday evening, at which time Kurt Vonnegut will address the group.

The conference concludes on Saturday, November 11, with a program of reports from the various national computer-based bibliographic networks. Conference participants will also be able to tour area libraries and will be given free admission to the Boston International Antiquarian Book Fair at the nearby Copley Plaza Hotel.

ACRL members have received registration information in the summer, and the July-August issue of American Libraries also includes registration forms. Further information is available from ACRL headquarters.

Space is limited for the conference, and early registration is urged!
