

and Information Studies, Madison, has been awarded a $148,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education to study the role of secondary school, community college, academic, public, state, and state institutional libraries in literacy education. A nation-wide survey and nine case studies form the basis of the study.

News Notes

• Indiana University and the University of Virginia have arranged a librarian exchange between two of the universities' librarians. Gail Oltmanns, assistant head in the undergraduate library at Indiana University, Bloomington, and Elizabeth Margutti, a librarian at Virginia's Clemons Library, exchanged jobs January 1 and will remain at one another's post until June 15. Their assignments have been made based upon the needs of the libraries in which they are working and taking into consideration their particular interests and abilities. Each librarian is paid by her home institution but enjoys official staff membership in the library which she is visiting. ■■

Notice to serials librarians

Louise Diodato at Governors State University is collecting opinions from current and past users of the OCLC Serials Control Subsystem, especially reactions to OCLC's decision to take the subsystem off the market and how it affects planning. Her goal is to convince OCLC that there are many librarians who would like the online system to continue for at least another year, if not indefinitely. If you are interested in helping with this project, contact: Louise W. Diodato, Head of the Serials Department, University Library, Governors State University, University Park, IL 60466.
