

Brenda Bailey-Haner, director of Networking and Resource Sharing for the Colorado State Library, has been named Librarian of the Year by the Colorado Library Association. Bailey-Haner was cited for her vision of outstanding access to library resources for all libraries and residents in the state. Other achievements under her direction have been service to help libraries find new integrated library systems, a statewide license to full-text databases for schools and libraries, implementation of national grants dealing with Internet access, and leadership of her team of staff and advisory committees.

Stephen Enniss, curator of literary collections at Emory University, has been awarded a Leverhulme Trust Visiting Fellowship to conduct research in the School of Advanced Study at the University of London during the 2002-03 academic year. The award funds fellows for a nine- or ten-month research residency at the school, while they pursue an independent research project. Enniss will be working on a critical study of the contemporary Irish poet Derek Mahon.

Bruce R. Schatz, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign's Graduate School of Library and Information Science researcher, has been elected as a 2001 fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Schatz was honored for work on supercomputing for information retrieval, particularly semantic analysis of scientific terminology, and for developing the Telesophy system, which inspired Mosaic software.

Anne Tanner has resigned as associate dean after nearly 21 years of service to Drexel University's College of Information Science and Technology (IST). Tanner has held positions of associate and assistant deans since 1986. During her tenure, she introduced innovative recruitment techniques and communications that resulted in a steady increase in enrollment; tripled the number of graduate inquiries; and was instrumental in establishing the IST Web site. She also led significant changes in college processes through the Knowledge Process Task Force and worked with faculty to launch a Women in Information Systems organization for IST students. Tanner joined the college in 1981 as managing editor of the Drexel Library Quarterly, and in 1983 she became publications editor. Prior to these positions, she was librarian at the Eastern Regional Research Center of the USDA and at Beaver College.

Arlene G. Taylor, professor of library and information science (LIS) at the University of Pittsburgh, has received a Fulbright Senior Specialists grant to Suranaree University of Technology in Thailand. She will spend three weeks leading workshops on online cataloging and on how to teach LIS distance education courses via the Web. Taylor also will give a seminar on major trends in LIS education. She joined the university in 1993 as an associate professor in the School of Information Science Department of Library and Information Science.

Retirements

Frank Q. Helms has retired as director of the West Chester University Library after 35 years of service. During his tenure, the library collection grew from 50,000 to 500,000 volumes and the library expanded to include a six-story addition. Helms was instrumental in developing the library's endowment in excess of $1.5 million. He has served as chair of the Library Directors Board of the State System of Higher Education of Pennsylvania and fulfilled many leadership positions in the Delaware Valley Chapter of ACRL and the Tri-State College Library Cooperative.

Frank Q. Helms and Mary E. Nehlig

Mary E. Nehlig has retired as assistant director of the West Chester University Library. Since joining West Chester in 1967, Nehlig has managed the public services division of the library as it embraced new technologies and expanded services. Nehlig has been active on campus and at regional and state levels with issues related to staff development.

Bill Roberts, university archivist at the University of California, Berkeley, has retired. He started in the Bancroft Library as a student assistant in 1964, while doing graduate work in French. He became a library assistant in Bancroft's old manuscript division in 1966 and was appointed assistant librarian in 1971. Roberts has worked in all areas of Bancroft—technical services, public services, and, since 1984, as university archivist, only the fourth since the university's foundation. During the mid-1990s, he served as acting curator of pictorial collections and of the History of Science and Technology Program—essentially holding three full-time jobs at once. Roberts has served on numerous librarywide and LAUC-B committees; he received LAUC-B's Distinguished Librarian Award (1997–98).

Bella Shirman, circulation supervisor and operations manager in the astronomy/mathematics/statistics library since 1990, has retired from the University of California, Berkeley.

James C. Thompson, university librarian at the University of California, Riverside, has retired after 15 years of service. Under Thompson's stewardship, the science library was completed in 1998 and the Rivera Library renovation was completed in 2001, modernizing and doubling the space available for collections and services to 301,032 square feet. Thompson was also responsible for reorganizing the management of the libraries and streamlining and automating library operations.

Deaths

Ed. note: In the January 2002 issue of C&RL News, the photo of George D. Terry was incorrectly identified as Dan Foley. The editors regret the error.

George D. Terry, vice provost and dean of libraries at the University of South Carolina (1991–2001), died October 20, 2001. Before assuming the position of dean, Terry served as director of the university's McKissick Museum and administrator for special projects, including development of an online library system to link the university's nine campuses. Terry excelled in facilitating the acquisition of notable materials for the libraries' special collection department. ■
