

CLIR publishes science survey

The Council on Library and Information Resources (CLIR) has published Preservation Science Survey: An Overview of Recent Developments in Research on the Conservation of Selected Analog Library and Archival Materials. This report contains chapters about the decay, treatment, and storage of paper, film and photographic materials, and magnetic tape. There is also a chapter about general preservation and a concluding chapter about trends and the research lacunae identified by the authors. Two appendices contain lists of the research projects and the institutions involved, arranged by country.

Henk J. Porck, a conservation scientist at the Koninklijke Bibliotheek (National Library of the Netherlands), and René Teygeler, a consultant to the KB, conducted the survey and wrote the report. CLIR asked the authors to survey the research done on preservation of analog materials during the past five years, review trends, and identify gaps. The survey focuses on research done in North America, Europe, and Australia.

The report is available for free in PDF format from the CLIR Web site at <http://www.clir.org>.
