FRANCESCA ALLEGRI, formerly head of Information Management Education Services at the University of North Carolina Health Sciences Library, Chapel Hill, relocated to Champaign, Illinois, in March. She will be teaching, consulting and writing in the areas of user education and information management. She continues as editor of the column, "Information Management Education," in Medical Reference Services Quarterly.

ANNIE G. KING, library director at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, has been awarded the Distinguished Service Award presented by the Alabama Library Association to an individual who has made a significant contribution toward the development of library service. The award was presented at the association's annual convention in Birmingham on April 13. King has served at Tuskegee for 37 years. She began her career there in 1952 as a reference librarian, became acting librarian in 1966, and library director in 1970.

Within the Alabama Library Association King has worked in the College, University, and Special Libraries Division and served on numerous committees. Beyond the association she has provided leadership in improving library services for the historically black institutions. She is a charter member and currently chairman of the board of trustees of the cooperative College Library Center in Atlanta, the national organization established to extend the benefits of cooperative processing and participation in OCLC to historically black universities. She participated in the planning of the Network of Alabama Academic Libraries, and worked with the initial planning group to insure that NAAL would include all the state's academic institutions offering graduate education; for that NAAL is unique in the nation. She is a current member of the NAAL Executive Council, the second time she has been elected to this position. In addition, King chaired the first Resource Sharing

Committee of NAAL which developed the procedure for the NAAL reimbursement program that has been successful in promoting the use of library resources throughout the state. Her committee also developed the charge to seek funding to improve the document delivery network. As a result, NAAL will be funded in 1989 to install telefacsimile equipment in all general and cooperative libraries.

Retirements

YEN-TSAI FENG, Roy E. Larsen librarian of Harvard College, Cambridge, Massachusetts, will retire after the current academic year. Appointed to the position in 1980, Feng is the first woman to serve as the librarian of Harvard College. Her career at Harvard began in 1955 as a reference librarian in the College Library. In 1957 she was appointed specialist in book selection for the social sciences in the Book Selection Division, and in 1965 she was appointed assistant librarian for documents, where she developed the Documents Division. In 1967 she left Harvard and became assistant director for research library service at the Boston Public Library. She then became the librarian of Wellesley College in 1977.

Feng received a bachelor's degree in literature from the University of Shanghai, a master's in English literature from Colorado State College, a Ph.D. in international relations from the University of Denver, and an MLS from the Columbia University School of Library Service. She has received honorary doctorates from New England College, Regis College, Smith College, Saint Joseph's College, and Simmons College. Feng has also received many other honors during her career, including the Joseph Coolidge Shaw, S.J., Medal of Boston College and the Julius Adams Stratton Prize for Cultural Achievement by the Friends of Switzerland, both of which she received with her husband, Philip McNiff. She has served on the ALA Committee on Accreditation, the WGBH Educational Foundation Community Advisory Board, the Library Visiting Committees for MIT and Lesley College, and the Board of Directors of the Boston YWCA, as well as chairing the ACRL Asian and African Committee and the Finance Committee of NELINET. Feng currently serves on the Board of Directors of the Polaroid Corporation and the Board of Trustees of Boston College.

RALPH W. HANSEN, librarian/archivist at Boise State University, Idaho, will retire at the end of May after 10 years of service at BSU and 36 years of service in the profession. Hansen began his career as a reference librarian at Brigham Young University but in 1956 switched to archival work when he founded the BYU archives. In 1962 he moved to Stanford University where he founded the SU archives in 1965. In 1967 he became the head of the Acquisitions Department at Stanford while continuing to serve as the university archivist. After a flood at Stanford's Meyer Library in 1978, Hansen supervised the restoration of 50,000 damaged volumes. In 1979 he moved to Boise State as the associate librarian. While at BSU, Hansen was put in charge of the three-year project of processing the Sen. Frank Church papers, which was completed in 1988.

SARAH MILLER, faculty member of the Rutgers University Department of Library and Information Studies, retired at the end of the 1988 school year after ten years of service. Before joining the staff at Rutgers, Miller served as head of serials and documents acquisition at Columbia University, and taught part-time at Columbia's Library School. She holds a B.A. from the University of Pittsburgh, and an M.A., MLS, and DLS from Columbia, where she also received the School of Library Service's Joseph Towne Wheeler Award.

Miller has done extensive research into the historical aspects of government printing and the government's dissemination of information, particularly as these have affected libraries. One of her recent articles, "A Distribution of Books by the Continental Congress: The Nation's Earliest Legislation Addressed to Libraries," appeared in the Journal of Library History. A paper she presented—"Government Printing in the United States, Past and Present"—at the Twelfth Annual Conference of the American Printing History Association will appear in a forthcoming issue of Printing History.

JOSEPH WHITTEN, professor of library science at Long Island University, Brookville, New York, retired after 27 years of service. Originally from Jackson, Mississippi, Whitten received his bachelor's degree from Mississippi College. He also holds degrees from George Peabody College, Columbia University, and New York University. Prior to his position at LIU, Whitten served as head librarian at SUNY Maritime College, The Cooper Union, and Lycoming College. He has also taught at the University of Texas, the University of North Carolina, Florida State University, Columbia University, and the University of Kentucky.

Whitten belongs to several professional associations including ALA and the New York Library Association. He has been honored by the County Executive of Nassau County and the SUNY Librarians Association. The "Joseph N. Whitten Award for Outstanding Scholarship and Service" was named in his honor by the Beta Mu Chapter and is given to graduating students at the LIU School of Library and Information Science.
