

lations, and communications.

The high school librarians wanted to know us as well. LIAS was particularly welcome because it gave the librarians a tool for teaching online catalogs and telecommunications. The bulletin board allowed them to act on what they found as well as come to us for help when they ran into problems using LIAS.

Soon the high school librarians were looking for a means of identifying specific materials in the school libraries. The arrival of *ACCESS Pennsylvania*² provided a solution. Now all twelve of the high schools—as well as more than 100 others in the state—are equipped with ACCESS Pennsylvania CD-ROM players and the Brodart-generated union catalog that lists local item holdings and all the holdings for other system participants.

The program has also brought the high school librarians into the mainstream library world. Now all librarians in the county can communicate with each other, and this has had the effect of eliminating many barriers and preconceptions. The public library has also benefitted by sharing with the schools, which has increased more than 200% in the first year of the program. Many materials that were once borrowed through OCLC were located through the network, thereby saving time and dollars.

For Penn State/Schuylkill the results have been most satisfactory. We have closer ties to all the area high schools. Using the bulletin board we have been able to resolve quickly many problems that previously would have been put off for lack of communication channels. Recently it became the solution to the long-standing question whether to allow local high school students to borrow materials directly from us. Now with access through their own school libraries, we know that their requests can be monitored by the school librarian. And because they have experienced LIAS at their schools, many of our incoming freshmen arrive with a working knowledge of the Penn State Library system.

We also discovered that the schools had items we needed too. In areas where Penn State's holdings are weak, especially children's literature and popular reading, the network members tend to be strong.

The bulletin board and network have been a positive experience for all participants. By carefully delineating guidelines for our participation at the beginning, Penn State/Schuylkill has been able to enjoy the benefits of a multitype network. ■■

ACRL's Fifth National Conference

"Building on the First Century" will be the theme of ACRL's Fifth National Conference, April 6-8, 1989, to be held in Cincinnati, Ohio. That year marks the 100th anniversary of the founding of the College Library Section of the American Library Association, ACRL's direct ancestor. In announcing the theme, conference co-chair Martha Bowman stated, "We want to link the past with the future, and the 100th anniversary of the College Library Section gives us an excellent opportunity for reflection, for celebration, and for anticipation of the next 100 years."

The conference will feature a combination of national speakers, contributed papers, and social events. The "Call for Papers" is now available and may be requested from the ACRL Fifth National Conference, 50 E. Huron, Chicago, IL 60611. The deadline for sending a notice of intent to submit a paper is June 1, 1988. The deadline for submitting the full paper is July 31, 1988. Papers will be selected through a blind referee process.

Members of the National Conference Executive Committee are: Martha Alexander Bowman, university librarian, University of Louisville, conference co-chair; Evan Farber, library director, Earlham College, conference co-chair; Jan Fennell, library director, Georgia College, contributed papers chair; Jordan Scepanski, library director, California State University, Long Beach, program chair; Mary Ellen Rutledge Elsbend, library director, Northern Kentucky University, local arrangements chair. ■■
