

Welcome to the November 2014 issue of C&RL News. With the growing trend of libraries as publisher, more institutions are focusing attention on locally created research and publications authored both by faculty and students. Danielle Barandiaran, Betty Rozum, and Becky Thoms outline the Utah State University's program of "Focusing on student research in the institutional repository" through the DigitalCommons@USU program.

The University of Michigan science library makes a concerted effort of highlighting publications by faculty authors through a series of exhibits and events. Jennifer Bonnet, Barbara Alvarez, and Sigrid Anderson Cordell discuss the program in their article "Let's get this party started."

The place of the print book in an environment of online access and changing roles for library spaces continues to be a topic of discussion on many campuses. Stefanie R. Bluemle and Carla B. Tracy take a look at legacy print collections in the learning-centered library in their piece "The lives of books."

The Princeton University Costen Children's Library highlights the legacy of print through a rare books education program in local elementary schools, Dana Sheridan discusses their approach to "Teaching the untouchable" in this issue's The Way I See It essay.

In this month's Scholarly Communication column, Corey Jackson of Oregon State University examines open access evaluation in the Humanities in his article "More than gatekeeping."

Registration is open for the ACRL 2015 Conference to be held March 25–28, 2015, in Portland, Oregon. In this month's issue, Angie Beiriger and Dan Kelley take us on a tour through the "Neighborhoods of Portland," highlighting the unique offerings of our host city.

We return to our look back at the history of the association this month with our 75th Anniversary feature "Cruising through the '50s" by Sarah H. Northam.

Make sure to check out the other features and departments this month, including Internet Resources on the history of medicine by Jolie Braun, and an overview of the contents of the November issue of our online-only scholarly research College and Research Libraries.

Thanks as always for reading the News!

—David Free, editor-in-chief, dfree@ala.org

Your Library—eImagined for Health Sciences

- 24/7 user access to health science database
- eBook Database for fast content search
- Purchase and Patron Driven Acquisition models available
- Pay only once—for the life of the edition

Visit R2Library.com
Start your free 30 day trial today!

R₂ DIGITAL
LIBRARY

Visit R2Library.com to learn more
Or call us at 800.345.6425 x600

Rittenhouse Book Distributors, Inc.
511 Feheley Drive | King of Prussia, PA 19406
www.rittenhouse.com

