EDITORIAL

Adrian Gilbert

Welcome to the eight edition of the International Journal of Anglo-Indian Studies. Megan Mills writes about the experiences of Anglo-Indians in Burma during the Second World War and discusses their bravery during a period of crisis. Lionel Lumb, a Canadian academic born in India, discusses the impact of the internet on the maintenance of Anglo-Indian identity. Blair Williams discusses his research dealing with Anglo-Indians in the UK and India. According to Williams, the Anglo-Indians in the UK have virtually lost their Anglo-Indian identity while the Anglo-Indians in India are maintaining theirs. To conclude this issue of the IJAIS we have a short piece by Esther Lyons about the history of a number of well-known Anglo-Indian families such as the Skinners.

CONTRIBUTIONS

The editor will consider for publication short articles or research notes dealing with the Anglo-Indians. The issues covered in the articles may range from history, sociology and psychology to econometrics. Preference will be given to pieces emphasising current research data that might not otherwise be published. Material should be sent to the Editor - International Journal of Anglo-Indian Studies, The Centre of Anglo-Indian Studies, 1 Kurt Place, Noble Park, Victoria, Australia. 3174. Alternately, material may be sent directly via E-mail to the Editor
