AJHPE special focus issue – call for papers: Innovations in health professions education during the COVID-19 era

Guest edited by: Dr Champion N Nyoni (University of the Free State), Dr Werner Cordier (University of Pretoria) and Dr Liz Wolvaardt (University of Pretoria)

COVID-19 was declared a global pandemic in March 2020, resulting in various strategies aimed at reducing transmission. Consequently, planned learning and teaching activities were disrupted – and in some cases halted – in many higher education institutions in Africa. Educators, administrators and students integrated innovations to their practice and/or research in health professions education during the COVID-19 pandemic. AJHPE calls for manuscripts for a special focus issue on 'Innovations in health professions education during the COVID-19 era'.

We are interested in the descriptions of innovations to educational practice and/ or educational research in health professions education during the COVID-19 era. Authors can submit their manuscripts as a short report or a full paper.

'Why I will never go back to my old practice': Short report guidelines

The purpose of this section is for authors to reflect on innovations to their educational practice and/or research during the COVID-19 era. The report should be up to 1 500 words and need not have ethics clearance. The following guidelines should be followed for short reports for this special focus issue:

Recommended headings

- Why was the idea necessary (what was the problem)?
- What was tried (intervention)?
- Lessons learnt
- What will I keep in my practice?
- What will I not do?
- Evidence of innovation (QR code)

All short reports for this special focus issue will be expected to be submitted with a QR code that links to a 3-minute video that reflects the evidence of the innovation being reported. Authors are asked to show evidence of their innovation in the form of, e.g. videos, artefacts, collages.
