

Letters

The Undergraduate Library (continued)

To the Editor:

In his recent article (Jan. 1978 C&RL) Mr. Wingate seems to suffer from some of the confusions he attributes to undergraduate libraries in their attempts to define their role. The "basic tenet" of these undergraduate libraries that still seem to be in a healthy state has very little to do with those identified in the Wingate article but would seem to be more akin to the list Irene Braden (Hoadley) defined in her thesis on "The Undergraduate Library."¹ In fact, several of the "defects" Wingate pinpoints are advantages when observed from the undergraduate library seat.

Most of us go out of our way to avoid "segregating" the undergraduate from the research library. We do, in fact, deliberately try to lead undergraduates, when they are ready, to the more comprehensive resources of the other place/s. Statistics in fact show that Toronto undergraduates use all three collections. They do, however, find different needs being met by each collection.

We often make the comparison of supermarket to gourmet store when we speak of the respective roles of the Sigmund Samuel Library and the research libraries. Any multiple copies that are purchased will be in Sig. Sam—our "supermarket"—where there is still a wide enough breadth of titles to support the variety of courses being offered and the diversity of teaching methods being used in the Faculty of Arts & Science.

A number of the institutions whose undergraduate collections have closed do not appear to have had sufficient depth in their collections to meet the diverse demands of today's undergraduate. But we must remember that "A bigger library is not better for all purposes. . . . Beyond a certain point, somewhere around 250,000 volumes, further increases in size sharply diminish the usefulness of a library for most demands."² By this standard the Sigmund

Samuel Library contains approximately 250,000 of the "most frequently used volumes" from the total holdings of the library system.

To achieve our "raison d'être as a convenient library of first resort"³ for the undergraduate and, indeed, for graduate students and faculty members who are new to our campus or to a particular subject, we also concentrate heavily on instruction in library use. This is one objective of undergraduate libraries that seems to have been totally ignored by Mr. Wingate, though it is on Braden's list of the six attributes that distinguish undergraduate libraries from research libraries.

One could go on and on and dissect statistics for each of the institutions quoted by Mr. Wingate or those appearing in the annual statistical compilation in the UGLI Newsletter. We may not meet all needs; but in an institution of 34,142 undergraduates and 11,796 graduate students, we are still able to keep some of the personal touch in our library services both for undergraduates in Sig. Sam. and for graduate students and faculty members in the research libraries. We feel our readers in Toronto benefit by the split, and similar tales are told by the librarians (and the statistics) at such diverse institutions as the Universities of British Columbia, California (Berkeley, Los Angeles, and San Diego), Hawaii, Michigan, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas and at Cornell, Harvard, McGill, and Stanford Universities and others.⁴—Sheila M. Laidlaw, Sigmund Samuel Librarian, University of Toronto.

REFERENCES

1. Subsequently published as ACRL Monograph No. 31 by ALA in 1970.
2. University of Toronto, President's Advisory Committee on the Sigmund Samuel Library Collection, Report (Toronto, 1972), p.9-10.
3. Ibid., p.5.
4. ACRL Undergraduate Librarians' Discussion Group, UGLI Newsletter: Statistical Issue, No. 12 (Jan. 1978).

Now for the first time, you can search the journal literature of all the major arts and humanities disciplines with one, easy-to-use reference tool:

ARTS & HUMANITIES CITATION INDEX™

Multidisciplinary

The new Arts & Humanities Citation Index covers over 800 of the world's important journals in literature, history, languages, religion, philosophy, drama/theater, art, music and other related fields. Each journal is indexed from cover to cover, so that you can locate in the A&HCI™ items like fiction, poetry, correspondence and book reviews as well as articles.

Current

The Arts & Humanities Citation Index cuts to a minimum the lag time between an item's publication and its coverage by an indexing service. You can locate new articles within a few months of their appearance in the literature.

Easy to Use

With the A&HCI, you get in-depth indexing without the complications of special vocabularies or classification schemes. Instead you'll search the journal literature through an author index, an enriched title-word index and — for the first time in the arts and humanities — a citation index.

The citation index lets you start a search with an earlier work central to your topic and find newer items that have cited (or referenced) it and are thus likely to be on the same subject. When a work of art (a painting, musical composition, film, etc.) is the basic subject of an article it too appears as an indexing term in the A&HCI's Citation Index.

Find Out More

The various indexing techniques offered by the Arts & Humanities Citation Index make it an extremely versatile tool. Whether you know a lot or a little about a subject ... an important author who has written on it or a few words likely to appear in a relevant title ... you can use the Arts & Humanities Citation Index to find the information you want. To learn more about it send in the coupon below.

Please send me more information on your new Arts & Humanities Citation Index™.

Name _____

Position _____

Organization _____

Address _____

City _____

State/Province _____

Zip _____

Country _____

Telephone _____

101-1311 ©1978 ISI

ISI®

Institute for Scientific Information®

325 Chestnut St., Phila., Pa. 19106, U.S.A. Tel: (215) 923-3300. Cable: SCINFO. Telex: 84-5305

European Office

132 High Street, Uxbridge, Middlesex, U.K. Tel: Uxbridge 30085. Telex: 933693